

I AM AN ANARCHIST
I am an Anarchist
Dont know what I want
But I know how to get it
I WANNA DESTROY THE SYSTEM

The Blitz Club, early 1980s London. Post-punk kids tired of nihilism, wanting something new. Steve Strange on the door, you couldn't buy your way in, you had to belong. A space for the weird, the creative, the ones who didn't fit anywhere else. Fashion as identity, as tribes, as resistance. Growing up in the Southwest, free party culture was always around us. Illegal rigs in fields, abandoned warehouses, sound systems built by hand. The more I look at it, the more I see the parallel, it's the same energy as Blitz, just a different era. Not one club in Covent Garden, but fields and derelict spaces across the UK. Both scenes creating their own world outside the mainstream. Both dressed for their environment.

Same principle: creating space to exist on your own terms.

This project takes both references and asks what that looks like now, what it could look like moving forward. A contemporary uniform for your tribe. Utility, durability, identity shaped through construction. Wide silhouettes for movement. Technical fastenings that reference historical wrapping. Clothes made to last, made to mean something beyond the season.
